

The best Horror Story

Emily was all alone that Friday night. Her parents were out of town and she had the house to herself. It was quite late when she started feeling uneasy. She felt as if someone was watching her and the fact that it was Friday the 13th didn't help her paranoia.

Of course, she didn't believe all that nonsense about Friday 13th, but it was night and she was all by herself so she felt quite queasy. Her parents had a late flight so they were supposed to come home quite late. Emily decided to watch a movie or a show to stop thinking about stupid stuff so she turned on the TV and put on her favorite film. Although the film took her mind off of stuff, the feeling of someone watching her was rising by the second. Halfway through the movie someone rang the doorbell. She flinched and thought for a minute should she open the door or not. She decided to open the door but with a pepper spray in her other hand. As she was coming closer to the door, she had a gut feeling not to open it. She decided to ignore it and there she was, standing next to the house door. Their house didn't have a peephole, so that made the whole situation even worse. She prepared the pepper spray in her hand and started going for the doorknob with her other one. She turned the doorknob and when she opened the door all her scares went away because, in front of the door, were her parents. They said their hellos and hugged her. She hated hugging and she was pretty sure they knew that too. She ignored it and led them inside.

They explained that they had come back early and they didn't want to wait an entire night for the flight. She talked a bit with them and decided she should go to bed. She prepared for bed and laid in it a few moments later.

As she was scrolling through her phone, the feeling she had the entire night increased rapidly and she started feeling nauseous. She took the glass of water her mother had given her before she went to her room and drank it. As she was drinking it, she got a text from someone. She looked at her phone and, as she was reading it, she froze. The glass fell on the floor and made a loud noise. The text on her phone was from her dad who said that her parents' flight had been delayed and that they wouldn't make it till morning. The following text said that she should make sure not to let anyone inside and that she should lock the doors. She thought for a moment and realized her gut was right and that whoever was downstairs weren't her parents. She explained the situation to her parents on the phone and they started calling her and telling her to get out. As she was about to get out through the window, the whole room started spinning as if she was really badly drunk. She came to the realization that whoever was downstairs, put something in her water. And then she fainted.

Josipa Jajčević, 4.h